

QUEENS COLLEGE
LATIN AMERICAN AND LATINO STUDIES PROGRAM
PRESENTS

RACIALIZED CONTRADICTIONS AND THE BIRTHWEIGHT PARADOX

FACULTY COLLOQUIUM WITH ALYSHIA GÁLVEZ

Alyshia Gálvez is associate professor and director of the CUNY Institute of Mexican Studies at Lehman College. She is a cultural anthropologist (PhD, NYU 2004) whose work focuses on the efforts by Mexican immigrants in New York City to achieve the rights of citizenship. Professor Gálvez is also the faculty advisor for the Lehman College D.R.E.A.M. Team.

Date:

November 27, 2012

Location:

Queens College
Rosenthal Library, 5th Fl.
Conference Room #2

Time:

11AM-12PM

Alien Mothers, Anchor Babies and the Invading Fetus: Racialized Contradictions and the Birthweight Paradox

The reproductive futures of Latina immigrant mothers have always been subject to scrutiny and a source of anxiety for those who see them as "excessively" fertile or their offspring as changing the composition of the nation. While Mexican immigrant women achieve favorable birth outcomes in spite of facing many socioeconomic disadvantages, their efforts are not lauded but couched within racialized discourses about immigrant fertility that constrain the ways they imagine citizenship for their US-born children.

For a copy of colloquium paper, please contact rperez1@qc.cuny.edu

Sponsored by QC Immigration Studies Working Group
QC Center for Teaching and Learning and CUNY Institute of Mexican Studies